AutoHotkey keys are not bound to any specific window and are available regardless of whether the program is running or not. AutoHotkey is highly configurable. You can create keys that work within other keys, that keep track of the last key the user pressed or scrolled. You can record and replay keys that have been executed. You can combine hotkeys to create complex composite hotkeys. Hotkeys can be bound to any action that the user can perform. You can map a hotkey to any keystroke, to the Shift or Ctrl keys, to the PrintScreen, or to the GetAsyncKeyState function. This is useful for those functions that are not available through SendInput. For example, AutoHotkey can map a single key to a whole sequence of keystrokes, such as Alt-F3, Alt-F4, Shift-F4, Ctrl-F3, Ctrl-Alt-F4, Ctrl-Alt-F3, F4, F3, F4. You can even chain hotkeys.
